Director

Dear Sir:

STAT

On [redacted] I resigned from the agency. At this time I was assured by the finance section that whatever was due me for traveling expenses and annual leave would be sent to me in a few weeks. This amount was a little over $ 1300. Since my resignation I have written several times inquiring about this but nothing has been heard from the agency. Considerable expense was entailed in finding a new job and moving. Also, since the agency did not feel responsible for paying my wife's travel expenses to the states, she is still waiting [redacted] Christmas is a very special and important season for my family and I would like my wife to be with me. This I cannot afford until the agency sends me what is due me. Apparently the great interest I took in my work during the three years I was with the agency and the successful manner in which I fulfilled my responsible position is forgotten when I am no longer of use to the agency and request reasonable action on that to which I am entitled.

STAT

As the agency disclaims any responsibility for my wife's travel expenses, the least it can do is to pay me what I have earned and am entitled to - within a reasonable time.

Would you please have some one check on this and have appropriate action taken. I have made phone calls and written letters but to no avail.

Very truly yours,

STAT
